I'd faked my way through the school day, planning this moment, and fighting the sick, fluttery feeling in my stomach. I'd a bit more'n a hour fore Dad got back from the hospital, a little more fore he freaked. He'd call Mum, she'd tell him where to find my friends' phone numbers, and when my friends couldn't tell him where me and Stevie were, he'd call the police.

I knew the routine. Interview parents. List everything that was missing from the home. Check messages on the computer. By the time the cops began looking for me, I had to be in hiding. I had maybe a couple hours.
